Imagine a Day Without Water

Imagine a Day Without Water – Including the Way You Get It

This year's Imagine a Day Without Water falls on October 19. Let's hope it's a day without the weather extremes being seen lately, so we can ponder the essential roles that water and the systems that deliver it play in our lives.

This story goes far beyond sparkling reservoirs and pristine wells. Just as important are all the pumps, dams, valves, filters and pipes bringing that water to our doorsteps.

There's the human infrastructure as well – the crews available 24/7 to respond to emergencies and replace aging water lines...along with people to answer your calls, constantly test and maintain your water's quality plus the treatment systems between you and your water's source.

So when you grab that faucet handle on October 19, take a moment to reflect on all that's behind the water flowing out. Bring your family, friends, and co-workers into the conversation, too. And explore www.aquarionwater.com to learn more about how we're working and investing in the infrastructures that help sustain our daily lives.

Toilets have come a long way in recent decades. Today's popular ultra-low-flow models can use a single gallon per flush, a small fraction of what an older throne might use. Learn more about WaterSense-labeled toilets at www.epa.gov/watersense.
